Historic Reno Preservation Society has done it again. Once again, HRPS brought more people downtown for a wing-ding then they could accommodate. 150 celebrants gathered together for a railroad themed party.

This year's party started at the RR depot, which is celebrating the 75th anniversary of its ground-breaking. Railroad Historian Dale Darney gave the group a glimpse of the mid-twenties effort, as well as a pictorial history of the many other buildings to previously occupy this space.

HRPS thanks member and railroad buff Bob Kline for hosting the complimentary wine bar at the depot.

Around 6:30 people left the depot to wander (safely we're happy to report) across the tracks to the Sante Fe Hotel, where a no-host cocktails and traditional family-style Basque dinner were enjoyed amidst the din of constant laughter and conversation.

Some 150 history buffs enjoyed dinner at the Santa Fe Hotel.

As if that wasn't enough, Florence Etcheberry, long associated with the Sante Fe, filled us in on the colorful history of the Sante Fe and Reno's Basque community.

We're sorry there were more people who wanted to join the fun than could be accommodated by the facility. We apologize to those who missed out, and promise that next year we'll try to find an even larger facility.

In three years time this party has tripled in attendance. Who said history isn't fun?

I was impressed with the number of historic neighborhood districts the area has to offer. I toured Pasadena and West Adams districts. Both are multicultural areas close to the downtown core and contain some of the finest craftsmen influenced residential buildings. The West Adams area has the largest concentration of designated landmarks and federal and local historic districts in Los Angeles. These designations help preserve the overall ambiance and quality of life in these neighborhoods and encourage the restoration, rebuilding and adaptive reuse of as many buildings as possible. Each of these districts has proactive neighborhood associations.

I have come back from the conference with new ideas, contacts and files of information from the National Trust and other preservation programs from around the country. Locally, HRPS can offer guidance to neighborhoods by having workshops and by being the clearinghouse for information. But it will be up to each Reno neighborhood to spearhead its own programs.

Mentioned many times at conference sessions was the formation of “conservation” districts, sometimes known as “preservation lite.” Historic districts generally follow United States Department of the Interior National Park Service guidelines. Conservation districts offer an alternative program by working within the local zoning codes. A board looks at the context of the neighborhood and less to its historic nature. They do not change the zoning, but modify by using a conservation overlay. Generally, a local neighborhood task force develops a comprehensive plan. They may look at setbacks, demolition or perhaps downsizing the number of building per acre. These districts stabilize communities and in the long run help preserve the neighborhoods unique characteristics. Conservation designation as opposed to historic designation may be less threatening to a neighborhood, and may work in many of Reno’s districts.

The conference presented a look at preservation trends by offering many local tours and educational sessions from the best preservation people from across the country and around the world. If you care about learning more about preserving Reno’s past for future generations, then I encourage all HRPS members to attend next year’s conference in Providence, Rhode Island.

One conference tour included a look at a penthouse in Castle Green in Pasadena. The apartment was filled with original Stickley furniture and Art and Crafts designer items.

HRPS AND HRPS LEADERS RECEIVE AWARDS IN 2000

At the recent “Accentuate the Positive” luncheon presented by Truckee Meadows Tomorrow, HRPS was honored with the Silver Star award presented to those who make a significant contribution to the Quality of Life we all enjoy in the Truckee Meadows. “The Silver Star award winners are doing the work it takes to protect and improve our quality of life every day.” President, Cindy Ainsworth, received the award on behalf of HRPS.

Our compliments to board member Joan Dyer who received an individual Silver Star award at the same luncheon in recognition of her volunteer work at Sierra Arts. Twenty-three years ago Joan began the Arts-in-Education program that has now reached over 90,000 children. Joan’s program is sometimes the only art exposure these children get.

Earlier in the year board members Cindy Ainsworth, President, and Nancy Holmes, Vice President, received an award from the Nevada State Historic Preservation Office for their work in promoting heritage tourism. You may recall that HRPS facilitated the creation of our Heritage Tourism Coalition which has brought many groups in the Truckee Meadows together. HTC has produced a book on Historic Organizational Resources as well as a site map for heritage tourism. In part the award read, “They have raised awareness of the role historic places can play in our tourist economy.”

“Never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world: indeed it’s the only thing that ever has.”

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS
Are You at Home, or Perhaps in the Office?

By Nancy Holmes

HRPS has an opportunity sometime this year, perhaps as early as June, to have our own downtown office/store where we will receive visitors, book walking tours, and sell appropriate merchandise or products. This is something the founders and the Board of HRPS have dreamed of since our initial organization. Now, with possibility becoming probability, we want to be ready to open our space when the space is ready! I would like to hear from everyone willing to represent our organization with the general public - and can donate time - four to five hours a week, on a fairly regular basis. It will be fun, challenging, and exciting!

We will gather all the HRPS Angels (sorry, I couldn’t resist) in late January or early February for training sessions. At that time we will work out schedules amenable to everyone. Please call Nancy Holmes now at 852-2094. Leave your name and phone number and, together, we’ll get started on this wonderful, historic adventure for HRPS and the City of Reno.

The Last Word

By Sharon Adler Walbridge, Editor

Happy New Year everyone!

Isn’t it hard to believe that we’ve now reached the year 2001? Thirty-three years ago when the famous Stanley Kubick film, 2001 – A Space Odyssey, was released 2001 seemed infinitely distant. Of course, the lesson for us is that nothing is infinitely distant, time forward or time past.

As you read this edition of our newsletter you will no doubt notice several things. Perhaps you’ve already noticed we’ve gone beyond calling this communication tool something other then merely newsletter.

We hope you’ll like the change, and appreciate the allusion that we walk in the footsteps of others as others will walk in ours.

You will find two “pullout” pages in this issue: one the form for making nominations for HRPS Preservation Awards; the other is our Goals for 2000–2001. We hope you’ll pull both of these out and keep them in your HRPS file for future reference.

If you read the Goals carefully, you will recognize that they are specific and ambitious. Perhaps you will also realize that there is more work then 12 board members can accomplish alone.

Please give consideration to helping with improving the walking tours, staffing a downtown office, researching materials to be used in community information workshops, helping to gather and properly file historical information that might otherwise be lost, and nominating people, properties or organizations for our Preservation Award.

We are a young, growing organization with significant accomplishments to our credit. With your help, we will raise the bar a little higher, alert the community to our seriousness of intent, and make historic preservation a permanent part of the on-going agenda of the City of Trembling Leaves.
Our Town, One Town;
Neighborhoods to Downtown

by Sharon Adler Walbridge, Editor

One of HRPS' primary concerns is the integrity of historic neighborhoods.

By that we mean that HRPS is interested in seeing neighborhoods protected, revitalized and renovated in such a way as to preserve as much of their original context and texture as is reasonably possible.

Vital neighborhoods are the building blocks for overall community wellbeing. Neighborhoods are more then the artifacts of their built environment. They are that - plus people.

People create the dynamics essential to mobilize residents to take pride in their area, whether they are owners or renters. It takes people to provide economic incentives to businesses to keep them in the neighborhood. It takes people to maintain property and landscapes. Collective energy makes neighborhoods vibrant and alive.

In recent years, the City of Reno has emphasized the desirability of addressing neighborhood issues at the neighborhood level. Currently, there are seven Neighborhood Advisory Boards, or NABs in the City. Each NAB receives a $50,000 Community Pride Grant from the general fund with which to address needs particular to their neighborhood. Having a budget empowers the NABs.

There is also an additional venue that addresses issues on an even more intimate level than the NABs. These are Neighborhood Associations and are designed to cover an area within a NAB that has a more specific commonality of interest. Unlike NABs, which are creatures of the City, Associations are self-sustaining groups with their own by-laws.

One of the first such associations in Reno is the Keystone Neighborhood Association. Louise Gilmartin is the first and current President. Louise is the owner of Kitchens and Baths, a design business that has been at the same Vine Street location since 1978.

In those 22 years, Louise has witnessed a dramatic change in the neighborhood. Even though she is a busy sole-proprietor, when she saw the notice for the formation of the Association she said, “I finally decided to do something about the neighborhood.”

In 1999, a group of disparate people gathered at the Gold and Silver where restaurant owner Jeff Paine donated meeting space. Once they’d reviewed their problems and assessed their needs, the group decided that priority one was to get additional street lighting to help reduce crime and improve neighbors’ sense of security.

Within one short year new streetlights were installed on Keystone Place, Vine, Second, Gardner and Chism. Funding was made available from the Neighborhood Advisory Board.

Having the NAB to turn to for funding gave the Association the confidence that solutions were possible.

The Keystone Association boundaries are west of Ralston Street to Chism and Stoker streets and from I-80 to the river. It is an area with many opportunities and many challenges.

Freeway access is excellent. Access to McCarran is less than two miles. Fourth and Second Streets serve as major arterials. Downtown is within walking distance.

The river corridor serves as a natural boundary, and the city's most pleasant esplanade. At Keystone and the river, the McKinley Arts and Culture Center literally is a bright spot within the neighborhood now that the lights have been installed in the parking area. At the other end of the district, the Lear Theatre is another cultural bright spot. In between these two gracious historic facilities, there are a number of attractive older homes on tree-lined streets, many still in use as single family residences. Others have been and are being converted to professional office space.

The railroad runs parallel to 3rd Street, which, of course, has a major impact on the area. There are at least a dozen halfway houses within the district. Additionally, there are a number of rundown and abandoned properties. But most of what’s within Association boundaries looks pretty good. It’s a microcosm of the larger city.

There’s everything here, facilities of all sorts: tourist, religious, professional, commercial, industrial, residential, educational, cultural, and the prettiest little river in the “Biggest Little City in the World.”

As I drove through the area one recent winter afternoon, large, dry snowflakes drifted down to settle on tree-lined streets. Evening lights began to flicker on. A sense of place whispered to me saying, “I’m worth saving.”

Louise Gilmartin and those in the Keystone Association must have heard that whisper also.
City of Reno
Conference of Neighborhoods

by Joy Orlich,
Ombudsman, City of Reno

The City of Reno sponsored the first ever “Conference of Neighborhoods” on Saturday, October 7, 2000 from 8am - 3pm. The day was designed to be a forum for residents to hear speakers, gather information, and discuss ideas for neighborhood improvement. We had 143 people attend which was great attendance for a first time event on a beautiful sunny Saturday during the Italian Festival.

City Manager Charles McNeely and Vice Mayor Dave Aiazi welcomed attendees on behalf of the City, and then guest speaker Elton Gatewood gave an address about the power of getting involved. Elton is the Neighborhood Coordinator for the city of Tacoma, Washington, a consultant/urban strategist to governments, nonprofits, colleges and universities, and grassroots organizations. He is recognized as a national expert in the areas of citizen participation, governmental and community coordination, neighborhood planning, and is the current President of Neighborhoods USA, the nation’s largest grassroots neighborhood organization.

The rest of the day consisted of breakout sessions with panel discussions on Community Resources for Neighborhood Development, Neighborhood Conflict Resolution, and How to Organize Your Neighbors; then lunchtime Table Topics with over two dozen local experts on everything from landscaping ideas to neighborhood clean-ups to recycling to park development.

The overwhelming response was, “Do This Again!” The kickoff meeting for next year’s planning effort is tentatively set for January 29. Anyone interested in being on the planning committee can contact me at 334-2018, and I’ll get them the information.

AT & T Before and After Renderings

This ‘60’s era telephone switching building owned by AT & T has never blended with anything in downtown Reno. AT & T deserves much credit that in its redesign of this building they worked so creatively with the new design guidelines for use in the Riverfront District.

The design guidelines are intended to strengthen the historic identity of the riverfront. New and refurbished buildings are meant to blend into the historic fabric of this area. Traditional materials and colors must be used.

As the Masonic block comes forward for approval, be sure to see how the design fits in with the AT&T building. Things are looking up along the river! Now if something good could happen for Woolworth's.

MEET A BOARD MEMBER

Leanne Stone

In 1956 my family moved to Reno from Patterson, California. In 1960 I graduated from Reno High and married Tom. Carl, Marnie and Rodger are the product of that union. They are married and living in the area with their spouses and our nine grandchildren.

I have worked at the University since 1979, and graduated from it in 1993. In 1988 Don Fowler, Professor of Anthropology and Historic Preservation came to the Division of Continuing Education, where I then worked, with the concept of professional development courses for archaeologists and historic preservation professionals. I worked with him to coordinate the Cultural Resources Management (later Heritage Resources Management) program with the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation, the National Park Service and other agencies to develop and present the courses.

That's how I became hooked on history and preservation, and started taking some classes.

In one class I did a photo-documentation of the reconstruction/restoration of Mackay School of Mines, gathering a lot of information about the Historic District of the University along the way.

My long-time good friend Ginger Salcedo introduced me to Pat Klos about the time she founded HRPS. With Pat's vision of the walking tour aspect for HRPS, I saw a way I could share the information I'd collected about the University. Somehow, that managed to evolve into my becoming the Walking Tour Coordinator. Thanks to our dedicated and enthusiastic guides, this program has expanded beyond our wildest dreams.

My favorite quote is from Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath, "How will we know it's us without our past?" I feel strongly about the need to preserve what we can in our area. It has become evident on the walking tours that there is still a lot of historic stock in Reno, the very visible demolitions of the Mapes Hotel Casino and Harold's Club notwithstanding.

But much is threatened too. The only way we will be able to rescue any of these remaining sites is to become active in pursuit of preservation. Because you're reading this Newsletter, you've taken the first step—you're interested! Take the next step, contact a HRPS Board member to volunteer.

There's much to be done – and the clock is ticking.

WALKING TOUR INFORMATION

By Leanne Stone

Thanks To Glee Willis, Joan Collins, Gaye Canepa, Scott Gibson and Mark Taxer for leading the October bike ride and walking tours that added about 30 people to our growing roster of participants. HRPS is fortunate to have this enthusiastic and dedicated group of guides. These tours are a primary source of new members.

Once again, HRPS will offer a Tour Guide workshop on March 3rd. I encourage all of you who might be interested in any one of several aspects of the tours to join us. In order to meet growing demand for our walks we need help in the following categories: tour leaders for existing tours, people willing to take existing information and create a new tour in a new neighborhood, people who like to do research and would ferret out information on additional areas of town. Lastly, we need people who will partner with guides to act as assistants: distribute handouts, collect fees, and herd stragglers. It is simply too much to expect one person to perform all these tasks with our larger groups.
